JUSTICE IS FACING JOB OF ARITHMETIC

It Will Be Herculean Task to Figure Out What West Virginia Really Owes This State.

Washington, D. C., March 20.—One of the biggest jobs of arithmetic a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States has confronted in a long time faces the one who may be assigned to work out the alleged indebtedness of the State of West Virginia to the Commonwealth of Virginia, growing out of the former's setting up in business for herself during the Civil War. Charles E. Littlefield, special master, has just reported on the claim of Virginia, that West Virginia should bear a proportion of Virginia's indebtedness preceding the breaking away of West Virginia. Exceptions which the States are expected to file will require the court to review the work of its special master. In compiling his report, Mr. Littlefield had to calculate the receipts and expenditures of an empire during a long period. The problem was complicated by war times, and by conditions such as slavery that have long since passed away. All these required tedious figuring, calling almost for the skill of an expert accountant. Before the court announces its final decree, for his appearance in Halifax Superior Court to-morrow, on the charge of murder.

Powell has employed able counsel, and it is alleged that he will be able to plead insanity. A large crowd gathered at the station to see the prisoner. It is not believed that the people of Scotland Neck will make any move whatever to take the law in their hands; they are law-abiding, and Powell is as safe in Halifax Jail as he could possibly be in Raleigh.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE LIME BILL

The fact is that when man surrenders his primal rights of absolute independence for the purpose of the congregation of men into communities, he distinctly grades his rights, and the right of the majority of the greatest good for the greatest number; and what, therefore, makes for the general welfare of the community is not prohibited by law, is well within the province of good government.

Broad Views Needed.
After all, then, are not all matters of this important character too grave and far-reaching in their effects to be judged by a narrow rule, but are not they the subject for broad view and far-reaching judgment?

Land, irrespective of individual ownership, has at all times and in all places been a subject of peculiar dignity. It has been recognized as the basis of all real property. Around it have been thrown peculiar and sacred attributes of sanctity and transfer, not known to personal property. It is the chief source of supply for fast increasing population, and it is the basis of the maintenance of government. It means to the Anglo-Saxon all that is conveyed in patriotic thought and sentiment.

In an address advocating the bill now under consideration, delivered before the "Virginia State farmers' institute" at its last annual meeting, it was pointed out that years of unscientific cultivation, followed by a great social and economical revolution, have left our soil in a state of depletion and exhaustion, and that we are, and have been for years, in fierce competition with vast virgin and fertile tracts of land of the West, which, by the cheap freight rates, the market price of agricultural products.

The greater part of the land in Virginia is acid, and all of it needs lime. The farmer, public policy requires that it should be regarded as a necessity. Agriculture in other States has prospered, and our farmers have remained on the soil, while the sons of Virginia have become wanderers in the land, because of her desolation.

A great and helpful effort is now being made by the progressive among us to rehabilitate our soil, and to uphold the tradition of farming life in the State.

Professor Wheeler, of the Rhode Island Experiment Station, the great expert on soils, tells us that the use of ground limestone will undo what poverty and desolation have accomplished. It will give to the farmers of the State in this grand work by academic discussion?

Some of the Results.
The ground limestone to be provided by this bill, and paid for, not given to the State, but to the farmer, will rehabilitate our impoverished farms; it will increase values for the purposes of State taxation enormously, and will enable all parts of the State to prosper and to assume their fair share of the burdens of government. Such legislation, with such purpose, and such result, cannot be properly and justly stigmatized.

The farmers of Virginia are not without precedent in their demands. The State of Illinois has made a law which has supplied ground limestone to her farmers, and her distinguished Governor bears hearty and willing testimony to the benefits derived therefrom by the farmers of his State.

It may be that I should not offer so progressive a State as Illinois for a precedent. But I am sure that the people, without tradition, or disposition to constitutional dispute, have such an uncomfortable way of doing great things. They would not be content with making their people prosperous and happy, that neither in precept or example will they, perhaps, appeal to later day Virginia.

Perhaps Great Britain may furnish a more profitable and certainly a striking, example of State aid to agricultural endeavor. She is quite at one with us in the matter of tradition, and
